Background

- The STCA has been in place since 2004, and is based on the principle, accepted by the United Nations Refugee Agency, that individuals should seek asylum in the first safe country they arrive in.
- The Agreement was signed in recognition that both countries share a responsibility to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.
- Since 2017, individuals have been entering Canada in high volumes between ports of entry to evade application of the STCA.

How does the STCA work?

Under the Agreement, individuals arriving from the U.S. at an official land border port of entry are ineligible to make an asylum claim – unless they meet an exception.

There are broad exceptions for family members, making it possible for migrants to plan staged arrivals.

Additional exemptions and exceptions include: U.S. citizens; unaccompanied minors; holders of certain Canadian documents; and public interest cases.

B. Monitoring U.S. Developments – Current Status

- In 2018-19, the U.S. introduced a series of changes to asylum policy and practice, affecting asylum seekers entering at and between POEs.
- These changes represent an important shift in posture, and are primarily intended to deter asylum seekers from making claims in the U.S. These include:

Zero tolerance policy	Individuals found crossing the U.S.-Mexico border illegally are referred for criminal prosecution.
Domestic and gang violence related-claims	Restricted access for claimants fleeing domestic or gang violence.
Migrant Protection Protocols	(‘Remain in Mexico’ policy) – Individuals are returned to Mexico while their claim is processed.
Metering	Limits the number of asylum seekers able to make a claim at certain U.S. ports of entry each day.
Eligibility restrictions for asylum	Individuals are ineligible for asylum in certain states if they didn’t seek protection from a transit country prior to arriving in the U.S.
Expansion of expedited removal	Individuals apprehended within two years of their arrival may be subject to expedited removal from the U.S.
U.S. cooperation agreements in Central America	Agreements to manage and deter the flow of migrants from and through the region (not yet in effect).

Despite numerous announcements, many changes are subject to court injunctions or do not apply to returnees under the STCA.

C. Federal Court Litigation

- The STCA and associated legislative framework are currently subject to litigation before the Federal Court on constitutional grounds.
 - Raises arguments of violations of section 7 (right to life, liberty and security) and section 15 (right to equality) of the Charter because the Applicants allege that the United States is not a safe third country.
- There are currently three cases that have been joined together before the Federal Court.
 - The Applicants have been joined by: Canadian Council of Refugees, Amnesty International and the Canadian Council of Churches.
- Department of Justice counter arguments demonstrate that the STCA is a tool to manage our asylum systems and that it is fully consistent with the Charter.
 - Arguments reflect the fact that officers can exercise discretion when faced with high profile, complex, sensitive or contentious cases – highlighting STCA safeguards

15(1)(i)i), 21(1)(b), 21(1)(a)

Contexte

- L'ETPS est en place depuis 2004. Elle est fondée sur le principe – accepté par l'Agence des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés – selon lequel une personne doit présenter sa demande d'asile dans le premier pays sûr où elle arrive.
- L'Entente a été signée en reconnaissance du fait que nos deux pays partagent la responsabilité de protéger les droits humains et les libertés fondamentales.
- Depuis 2017, des volumes importants de migrants arrivent au Canada entre les points d'entrée pour échapper à l'application de l'ETPS.

Fonctionnement de l'ETPS

En vertu de l'Entente, les personnes qui franchissent la frontière terrestre depuis les États-Unis à un point d'entrée terrestre officiel n'ont pas le droit de présenter une demande d'asile, à moins d'être visées par une exception.

Il existe des exceptions générales pour les membres de la famille, ce qui permet aux migrants de planifier des arrivées par étapes.

Les autres dispenses et exceptions incluent: les citoyens des États-Unis, les mineurs non accompagnés, les titulaires de certains documents canadiens et les cas d'intérêt public.

B. Surveillance des développements aux États-Unis – Situation actuelle

- En 2018-2019, les États-Unis ont apporté à leurs politiques et à leurs pratiques en matière d'asile une série de modifications ayant une incidence sur les demandeurs d'asile qui franchissent les frontières au point d'entrée ou entre les points d'entrée.
- Ces modifications représentent un changement de position important et visent principalement à dissuader les demandeurs d'asile de présenter une demande d'asile aux États-Unis. En voici un aperçu :

Politique de tolérance zéro	Le cas des personnes interceptées pour avoir traversé illégalement la frontière entre les États-Unis et le Mexique est renvoyé à des fins de poursuites criminelles.
Demandes liées à de la violence domestique ou à de la violence des gangs	Restriction de l'accès des demandeurs qui fuient la violence domestique ou la violence des gangs.
Protocoles de protection des migrants	(Protocole « Remain in Mexico ») – Les personnes sont renvoyées au Mexique pendant le traitement de leur demande.
Comptage	Limite quant au nombre de demandeurs d'asile qui peuvent présenter une demande d'asile dans certains points d'entrée des États-Unis chaque jour.
Restrictions quant à l'admissibilité en matière d'asile	Dans certains États, une personne est considérée comme inadmissible à la présentation d'une demande d'asile si elle n'a pas demandé la protection d'un pays de transit avant d'arriver aux États-Unis.
Expansion du renvoi accéléré	Les personnes appréhendées dans les deux années suivant leur arrivée pourraient faire l'objet d'un renvoi accéléré des États-Unis.
Ententes de coopération des États-Unis en Amérique centrale	Ententes visant à gérer et à prévenir les flux de migrants en provenance ou à destination de la région (pas encore en vigueur).

Malgré de multiples annonces, un grand nombre de modifications sont visées par des injonctions de tribunaux ou ne concernent pas les personnes rapatriées en application de l'ETPS.

C. Litige devant la Cour fédérale

- L'ETPS et le cadre législatif qui s'y rapporte font actuellement l'objet d'un litige devant la Cour fédérale pour des motifs d'ordre constitutionnel.
 - Les demandeurs allèguent que les États-Unis ne constituent pas un tiers pays sûr et estiment qu'il y a eu violation des articles 7 (droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa propre personne) et 15 (droit à l'égalité) de la Charte.
- Il y a actuellement trois dossiers joints devant la Cour fédérale.
 - Se sont joints aux demandeurs : le Conseil canadien pour les réfugiés, Amnistie internationale et le Conseil canadien des Églises.
- Les contre-arguments du ministère de la Justice démontrent que l'ETPS est un outil de gestion de nos systèmes d'octroi de l'asile et qu'il respecte entièrement la Charte.
 - Ces arguments tiennent compte du fait que les agents peuvent exercer des pouvoirs discrétionnaires lorsqu'ils sont aux prises avec des cas très médiatisés, complexes, délicats ou litigieux – ils soulignent les mesures de protection prévues dans l'ETPS.

Hello Jack:

The US Relations Division at IIR is preparing a memo to the Ministers on the STCA,

IIR and RAB have drafted the memo, and we would like to ask that Comms contribute to the section on Communications

Implications: <http://gcdocs2.ci.gc.ca/otcs/cs.exe?func=ll&objaction=overview&objid=321424404>

Would Comms be able to provide input by COB tomorrow? If more time is needed, just let me know as we can be flexible.
(And please feel free to forward to other divisions in Comms, if it isn't your branch that's responsible for this).
